Adobe Audition is a large program that offers a fair number of tools, allowing you to design and edit sound in many ways. Some of its common functions include tracking down and finding and replacing errors in a recording with some included technology, detecting and fixing bad data during the conversion process, and displaying statistics about a file.

Q: UICollectionView dataSource update after adding cells I have a UICollectionView with a custom UICollectionViewLayout. My data is represented by 3 "cell views", but the view is really only 2 cells. I'm adding cells dynamically based on some conditions on my data (i.e. "if the data is new, add this one"). I'm doing it like this: -

(void)addCellsWithData:(NSArray *)data { if (self.dataSource) { [self.dataSource removeAllObjects]; } NSMutableArray *arr = [[NSMutableArray alloc] init]; for (NSDictionary *dic in data) { View *view = [self buildViewWithData:(NSArray *)dic[@"data"]]; [arr addObject:view]; } self.dataSource = arr; if (self.delegate && [self.delegate respondsToSelector:@selector(collectionView:cellViewForItem:)]) { [self.delegate collectionView:self.collectionView cellViewForItem:nil]; } }

this is working fine. But the layout being used is just a UICollectionViewFlowLayout, and not a custom layout. How can I update the collectionView's layout after adding new cells? A: just have the newly added cell be the last cell that's visible or just update your layout from the collectionView(_:cellForItemAt:) delegate method

Q: Serialization order in Java I am currently using ObjectOutputStream to serialize objects. Why I get :

[c2@foo.b:33]$ java -cp out.jar test.Main [c2@foo.b:36]$
obj.toString() "Hello" [c2@foo.b:37]$ obj2.toString()
"World!" And not : [c2@foo

I'm only slightly annoyed. It shouldn't be hard to make art. Everybody can draw. You just have to practice a little bit. But how do you do that when you don't have any paper to draw on? Channels on your computer monitor are an obvious but unattractive alternative. I suppose there is an Apple Magic Pen that would make that obsolete. But what if you don't have a monitor? Drew Rynholds made a nifty little paper plane that could be used as an impromptu drawing surface: As he says in his Instructables page, when you're building the device you need to make sure that the surface that you're putting your paper on is smooth and flat. Here is a photo of the finished version, which is about 2" x 2". I placed a piece of clear tape over the paper, but any flat surface will do. The directions are as follows: 1) Cut 2 small triangles out of cardboard (don't use a ruler, just cut with a utility knife, it's not important to get the shape exactly right). 2) Glue two triangles together (or just tape them – this could be used as either a ruler, workboard or a drawing surface) 3) Cut a piece of tape to “anchor” it to your surface (when you're ready to use it, just pull off one piece of the tape and this will also detach the plane from the surface) 4) Once you have put the tape back on, tape one of the edges of the paper that you're using (as a work surface) to the cardboard and your plane should now be ready to go (but not too soon) Happy drawing!
