Bilateral transradial approach for pediatric transcatheter aortic valve replacement. Transcatheter aortic valve replacement (TAVR) is an alternative treatment option for high-risk patients with severe aortic stenosis who are not suitable for surgical aortic valve replacement. Pediatric patients may be exposed to undue risks associated with the femoral approach. The bilateral transradial (BRA) route is a safe and feasible alternative approach to the femoral artery for TAVR. Use of the BRA approach may result in better outcomes as it allows for lower-risk patients to be treated via a less-invasive approach. We retrospectively analyzed the prospective multicenter registry of the National Center for Cardiovascular Research. Of 1223 cases enrolled in the BRA registry, the youngest patient was 9 years old and the oldest was 63. Fourteen patients (1.2%) were bilaterally exposed. Eleven of these patients (79%) successfully completed the procedure, whereas 3 patients (21%) failed due to radial artery malfunction and 1 patient (7%) due to acute coronary occlusion of the right coronary artery. Results in this study with the BRA approach demonstrate that it is an effective and safe alternative to the femoral artery for TAVR. In-situ exposure to triacetone triperoxide (TATP) induced neurodegeneration. Since 2007, an increasing number of terrorist attacks with the explosive triacetone triperoxide (TATP) have been reported. Neurotoxicity of TATP has been described after in-vitro and ex-vivo incubation, but a nerve injury model after in-situ exposure is missing. In-situ exposure to a
