It's powerful and easy to use. Compared to many operating systems which have all sorts of bugs and problems, Mac OS X is very stable, and can do almost anything. It's a much more capable OS than other operating systems, but since it's so powerful, you have to work for your results, unlike Windows. Before using an iPhone or other phone, make sure that it has a good sync and data plan. You will be able to use many of the features, but will have limited internet, messaging, and storage. You will also need to download the Google apps. For these reasons, I suggest that you use a computer or other device to maintain your phone. If you lose your phone or need to access your photos or other content, you will need to use a computer or mobile device. It is critical that you choose a data plan that offers enough data for your needs. The more data you have, the better. Some plans charge you more for data used in a month, so it's a good idea to be a bit cautious. However, you don't want to be overburdened with data. A plan that is too small will not allow you to use all the features of your phone or computer. Check your phone contract for information about how much data you have. If you don't use a lot of data, your phone company might offer special plans. This usually limits the number of features available, but is usually cheaper than a plan with a large amount of data. If you don't have a contract, look at the offers from your cell phone carrier to see if they have a better plan. As a beginner, you will want to use Wi-Fi. Wi-Fi is free and very fast, but can be a little tricky. First, find out where the nearest Wi-Fi hotspot is. Turn your phone off or put it to sleep, then turn it on and open the Wi-Fi indicator. You will see a list of Wi-Fi networks. If it
