“This technology was developed as part of a partnership between EA SPORTS and the German Institute for Human Movement Sciences, and it’s incredibly exciting to see how the data is being used,” said David Rutter, Head of Sports Technology at EA SPORTS. “We have been working with the German Football Federation since 2014, and now we’re excited to see this technology in action at the FIFA World Cup.” How will the new technology change the way you play? Above: The German Football Federation (DFB) helped develop the HyperMotion technology featured in FIFA 22. FIFA 22's "HyperMotion Technology" combines real-life motion capture data with artificial intelligence (AI). The AI is made up of millions of rules programmed based on player movement data gathered in motion capture suits worn by 22 real-life players. The AI will analyse that data and make intelligent decisions about positioning, passing, tackling, shooting and other actions during a football match. The AI also gathers data using surface sensors on the ground to determine the location of player movement, tackles and shots on target. As a result, the AI can predict exactly when a player will run, pass, shoot or dribble the ball. The AI will also recognise that a player has been fouled, which can lead to the player receiving a free kick. In addition, the AI will take into account tactical decisions and line-ups, which can potentially make substitutions more efficient and react quicker to changes in the game situation. The AI also accurately simulates all-important touches on goal line, offside and throw-ins. An "Frequency Analysis" option has also been added to the player HUD. When a player is closely tracked and the player receives a pass or makes a tackle, the player HUD will show if he or she has a chance of scoring a goal (green) or will get a shot off (red). How did the German Football Federation help develop the technology? The German Football Federation (DFB) is the worldwide leading professional football league. As part of a partnership between EA SPORTS and the German Football Federation since 2014, the DFB helped develop the HyperMotion technology featured in FIFA 22. The official FIFA World Cup™ squad was scanned and analysed during live action matches and millions of unique movement patterns were recorded. These data were then compiled into a virtual player model to be used in a 22-player

(AP) 'My concern right now is getting over the top of that first hurdle, which is to see what would happen to the 3G world if we had these issues,' White House Press Secretary Jay Carney said Sunday. 'So I don't think anything should be concluded until we look at that.' 'When I asked the president whether he had been briefed on it he said he hadn't. But you know, it was - it was a big news item yesterday.' The President's meeting with the Pope came as a surprise to many given he has spoken about his support of same-sex marriage and gay adoption. Holding true to her form in recent years, Mrs Obama wore a range of tight fitted capes and tweed knee-length dresses to the Papal audience at the White House. Of course, the Pope's wardrobe choices remain a mystery for the most part, but it has been speculated the massive figures of the pieces may have something to do with Catholicism's views on nudism. Artwork for the Pope's famous 'slip gown' has been in the works since the 19th century and is thought to be a symbol of the faithful community in which believers are welcomed by the father of all. The Vatican has yet to comment on the Pope's choice of getaway attire in a statement to E! News, simply writing that it is glad to see the President and First Lady of the United States 'will be able to attend' the Papal audience. The couple are set to accompany the Pope at the Vatican, the White House and the historic Lincoln Memorial and would be staying in a suite at the landmark hotel. President Obama is also said
