Heroes Of Hammerwatch: Moon Temple

BlueSky's Medivh is an action RPG set in the WarCraft Universe. In the former age of Azeroth, the Warcraft Multiverse was in turmoil. A demonic invasion of the Twisting Nether had begun and the only hope for humanity was to seek out and recover the original relic of the High King, the Medivh's Shard of the World Tree. After saving the forsaken remnants of humanity from certain destruction, the heroes of the Horde and the Alliance faced off in the Elemental Plane of Fire against the demons of the Burning Legion. The Alliance army assembled to break through the Burning Legion's defense at four Elemental Forts in an all-out assault on the four dimensions of the Burning Legion. While this was taking place, the Horde's future champion, Medivh, began his search for the Medivh's Shard of the World Tree. After finding a corrupted version of the shard he discovered that the WarCraft Multiverse was broken into four connected realms: the human realm of Azeroth, the elven realm of Quel'thas, the demonic realm of Orr, and the demon world of Argus. The demon of Kalimdor, Medivh, and the Alliance's chosen champion, Malfurion Stormrage, began their quest on the elven realm of Quel'thas. But not long after their arrival, the conflict with the demons raged on. In the midst of this furious battle, a great rift opened in the world tree and all of the realms of the WarCraft Multiverse crashed together. Unfortunately, this chaotic situation left all of them forever connected. In this strange new world, Medivh's Shard was no longer in its original form. With this devastating piece of the World Tree shattered, the demonic invasion of Azeroth was no longer restrained. In the end, the heroes of the Alliance and Horde united against the Burning Legion and retrieved the shards of the World Tree.

The Alliance and the Horde created the Last War, the final battle between the two sides, where it was said that all of the shards of the World Tree were reunited. The subsequent clash between the Alliance and the Horde was said to have ended the war once and for all. The majority of the Old World was destroyed in this war. New life was given to its heart. Quel'thas was rebuilt. The land of Kalimdor was restored and the people of the Horde rebuilt the Golden Crusade. c9d1549cdd

Wednesday, March 14, 2015 If she knew how long we'd walked before the huddled group loomed over us, Jennifer was probably fine with us dragging out the process. At all costs, we had to stick to plan. On a trip designed to distract her from the hell in her life, the Accident Girl had not been altogether useless to us. Sure, the bottle of vodka and the sleeping pill were the least we could do for her, but a less direct form of charity? "Those are the first shoes I'd ever been allowed to wear," she'd said, barely looking up from the picture of the boy in the dress, now placed in front of her. "Aunt Irene persuaded her." "She was an excellent nanny," I'd said. "But Cinderella? How could her mother allow that, Diary?" "Mom's always known better. They're broken." I made a noise of sympathy, but I was hoping the kid would hurry up and sink into a coma. "She looked pretty cool. That costume was seriously awesome. I'm pretty sure," she checked the snap, "She was wearing a collar." "Too bad she never got to see the end." "You're not trying to sabotage my relationship with Cabal, are you? We're kinda like it's own little therapy group, you know, without the whole patient blabbering thing." "Hey, it's a supportive network, like a forest to protect you from the wilderness." "A forest surrounded by open exposure to gun-toting madmen and disgruntled ex-wives. I've never been so scared of a tree. Was it the moss?" "Good point," I said, stifling a giggle. And then the boy's face had told me as much as words would have, I had to hand it to Irene. It showed me what Cinderella's mother had really been trying to hide from me all along. It had a lot of Daddy's features. Humble enough to know he'd been lucky and hadn't been the one who'd bumped into that poor old bean stump. We had a plan. The random guy with the gun kept sneaking weird looks at us
