Save. 573 / 61Å .Q: python - server processing and clients GUI I have some servers that poll about 300 clients each minute and perform a complex computation for those clients. The more clients I have the more work they will do. I have a simple windows gui for my clients that I want to add to my python script. The client gui needs to be able to display the inputs the clients need to send to the server as well as the result they should get. In other words, the client will send a payload and the server will respond with the result as well as a status of whether or not the payload was accepted by the server. Currently I have a regular python script running on a server that handles the client requests and sends the results back to them. I've tried using multiprocessing to process the clients, but it is too slow. In addition, I'm open to other solutions. A: Server will send response to all clients simultaneously. Server should be aware of clients when it sends response. There is no way to have gui from python on a server and have server sending responses. If you need gui, you can either have it on client or you can use websockets. Prognostic factors in primary breast cancer patients receiving adjuvant radiotherapy: a meta-analysis. Radiotherapy reduces local recurrence and improves overall survival (OS) in patients with primary breast cancer.
