MUMBAI, Jan 25 (Reuters) - The trouble engulfing the power grid in southern India on the back of a three-month monsoon drenching is growing as the weather warms, a senior government official said on Friday, although the government still does not see a threat to Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's re-election. The main problem is the Gokak power plant in Andhra Pradesh where four major power lines have been flooded, and the widely travelled lines connecting that plant to the city of Hyderabad were shut on Thursday, T.S. Anjaneyulu, a spokesperson for state-run power generation company NTPC, told Reuters. Three-month rain is typical in Hyderabad, a city of around 2.5 million, located on a large man-made water tank. "The problem of the Gokak plant has been resolved as the water has receded. Power supply to several parts of Andhra Pradesh and Telangana is in full swing," Anjaneyulu said. "The main issue has been taken care of. There has been no problem so far. "Except for one line, all the other lines are functioning as planned," he said, referring to the three main transmission lines that began to short circuit.

Following a previous two-month rainy season, 6d1f23a050
